In Difference and Repetition (tr. Paul Patton, Columbia University Press, 1994, p. 40), published the same year as Expressionism in Philosophy, Deleuze writes: Spinoza's substance appears independent of the modes, while the modes are dependent on substance...Substance must itself be said of the modes and only of the modes. Such a condition can be satisfied only at the price of a more general categorical reversal according to which being is said of becoming, identity of that which is ...

Description. In this extraordinary work Gilles Deleuze, the most renowned living
philosopher in France,
reflects on one of the figures of the past who has most influenced his

reconfiguration of the tasks of philosophy.
Deleuze's brilliant text
shows how current definitions of philosophy do not apply to Spinoza: a solitary thinker (yet
scandalous and hated),
he conceived of
philosophy as an enterprise of liberation and radical
demystification much as did Leibniz or, later

Nietzsche.
