INTRODUCTION: Undertriage of older

trauma victims has been a persistent and serious problem. Because of physiologic changes and pre-existing disease, blunt trauma in older persons is often covert. Prehospital trauma triage guidelines developed for use with a general adult population may not be sensitive enough to detect covert injuries in elderly trauma patients.

Effectiveness of prehospital trauma triage guidelines for ...

Prehospital trauma triage The clinical effectiveness of any trauma triage process lies in its ability to differentiate persons who have and have not sustained major trauma. Thus, when we think in terms of clinical effectiveness, we are actually referring to the validity, or accuracy, of the process, expressed as sensitivity and specificity.
