Start with simple iRacing setup changes. In terms of setup changes, there are universal changes and specific changes. A universal change is something like raising the rear ride height (in a non-aero car), something like iRacing's Mazda MX-5. If you raise the rear ride height, you're essentially shifting more of the car's weight to the front axle.

OVERsteer: Synonymous with "loose." The slip angle of the rear tires is greater than the slip angle of the front tires when a car is cornering at the limit. There are numerous types of OVERsteer - steady rstate, trailing rthrottle, power, brake rbias induced, and aerodynamically induced. To the driver it feels as if the car is turning more than the steering input would dictate. Easing off on the steering without making any sudden moves with the throttle can bring the rear of ...
