Peak water is a concept that underlines the growing constraints on the availability, quality, and use of freshwater resources. Peak water was defined in a 2010 peer-reviewed article in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences by Peter Gleick and Meena Palaniappan. They distinguish between peak renewable, peak non-renewable, and peak ecological water in order to demonstrate the fact that although there is a vast amount of water on the planet, sustainably managed water is becoming scarce

"It's like radiant heating in reverse," says Nick Mann, project manager at Spruce Peak. "We are freezing the ground, rather than warming it." The next step is laying down the ice. A large hose is connected to a fire hydrant and floods the Rink with water. Once the water makes contact with the glycolfilled tubes, it freezes.
