Fragmented World of the 1930s - Oxford Scholarship

Fragmentation is about disintegration, heterogeneity and separation. The result of globalisation is one economic world. The end result of fragmentation is many political worlds. It is a question of one against many. The breakdown of the USSR and the end of the Cold war has produced a world that is more globalised but more fragmented.

Fragmented world scenario: The above indicators point towards our 'fragmented world' scenario where the Communist Party of China (CPC) comes under internal pressure for modest reforms to the existing system, forcing a turn inwards to concentrate on maintaining domestic control. In this scenario, without reduced export revenues, the Chinese state's falling fiscal resources must be concentrated on domestic security, and Belt and Road Initiative (BRI) investment - already suppressed - is ...

Collective action in a fragmented world International collective action is in search of a new paradigm. It cannot rely anymore on global binding rules supported by universal institutions. New forms of cooperation have emerged in a number of fields.

Collective action in a fragmented world | Bruegel

Fragmented is an adjective that describes things that have been reduced or divided into fragments—pieces that have been broken off of or detached from the whole. Fragment most commonly refers to a part that has broken off rather than one that has been separated gently or intentionally, like fragments of a broken vase or a broken bone.

Fragmented | Definition of Fragmented at Dictionary.com

Globalization as an economic model became popular following the collapse of the Soviet Union in 1990s. Capitalism’s onward march no longer faced a barrier. Factors that had contributed to globalisation were increasingly sophisticated information, communication and transportation technologies and services, mass migration of people, a level of economic activity that had outgrown national ...
