The Power of Strategic Thinking. By Carol Christ // Volume 20, Number 2 // March/April 2012. A Dartmouth University professor puts the tasks that all organizations must perform into three boxes: (1) a box containing those things an institution does to make its core business as excellent as possible, (2) a box of "selective forgetting" for eliminating activities no longer productive or useful, and (3) a box of innovation for selective experimentation with projects that anticipate the future.

The Power of Strategic Thinking - AGB

Strategy and planning is about determining what's most important for your organization to do and then figuring out how best to get those things done.
