Introduction If you don't have time to read the whole book, here's what it says: Marketing by interrupting people isn't cost-effective anymore. You can't afford to seek out people and send them unwanted marketing messages, in large groups, and hope that some will send you money.

Unleashing the Ideavirus offers practical ideas on how to spread a marketing message without spending alot of money. Some of what Seth Godin describes may be more common sense than revolutionary. However, he does present several fairly sound approaches to marketing and taking advantage of the concepts of Malcolm Gladwell's Tipping Point (a 5 star book and one of my favorites).

Unleashing the Ideavirus (2000) provides a map for charting a successful marketing campaign on the modern media landscape. It argues that the rise of the internet and the decline of advertising as an effective way of reaching people dictate that we need to rethink radically the way we approach marketing.

Unleashing the Ideavirus by Seth Godin - Blinkist

Last week we concluded a three-part overview of Seth Godin's Permission Marketing. Permission marketing was written in 1999. Two years later, Godin followed up with Unleashing the Ideavirus. The subtitle reads: "Stop marketing at people! Turn your ideas into epidemics by helping your customers do the marketing for you."
