There Is No God
"There's no evidence that God doesn't exist." This argument is often offered as a last line of defense in religious debates, and the person posing it might feel very clever coming up with it. However, the premise of the argument is both flawed and ridiculous. The failure to disprove something does not constitute proof of its existence.

Only the atheist appreciates just how uncanny our situation is: most of us believe in a God that is every bit as specious as the gods of Mount Olympus; no person, whatever his or her qualifications, can seek public office in the United States without pretending to be certain that such a God exists; and much of what passes for public policy in our country conforms to religious taboos and superstitions appropriate to a medieval theocracy.

There is no scientific evidence indicating that God exists. We all know that. For example: God has never left any physical evidence of his existence on earth. None of Jesus' "miracles" left any physical evidence either. (see this page) God has never spoken to modern man, for example by taking over all the television stations and broadcasting a rational message to everyone.

The preponderance of circumstantial evidence leads to the conclusion that there is no god. The magnitude of human suffering throughout the world, throughout the ages argues against the existence of a loving God. Think Somalia 2011. No prayer that could prove God’s existence has ever been answered.

Conclusion: There is No God « The Church Of Truth™

There is, to begin with, a glaring contradiction in the argument that the presence of evil and suffering in our world indicates that there is no God. In the first place, our very awareness of evil and suffering underlines the fact that we seem to possess some internal standard of right and wrong, good and evil, by which we are able to judge existence and the universe, and find them wanting.
