Among salamandrid species, paedomorphic and metamorphic phenotypes can be observed within single populations (facultative paedomorphosis). Despite wide interest in facultative paedomorphosis and polymorphism produced by heterochronic changes (heterochronic polymorphism), the studies that investigate intraspecific morphological variation in facultative paedomorphic species are largely missing.

Facultative paedomorphosis and the pattern of intra- and ...

Facultative paedomorphosis, a process in which newt larvae can opt for reproduction before or after metamorphosis, is geographically heterogeneous. Despite numerous ecological studies and recent evidence of declines in paedomorphic populations, however, no attempt to model environmental variables that explain the presence of paedomorphs has been made at a multi-scale level.

A multi-scale approach to facultative paedomorphosis of ...

Facultative paedomorphosis is a polyphenism in which salamanders either metamorphose or retain their larval morphology and eventually become paedomorphic.

FACULTATIVE PAEDOMORPHOSIS AND METAMORPHOSIS IN NEWTS AND ...

Abstract. In some salamander species the retention of larval characteristics in sexually mature adults (paedomorphosis) is an alternative to metamorphosis. In many species paedomorphosis is facultative, thus offering a unique opportunity to test predictions on the evolution of life history variation. Here I expand upon a previous hypothesis ("paedomorph advantage") and present two alternative selection mechanisms ("best of a bad lot" and "dimorphic paedomorph" hypotheses) for the maintenance ...

Evolution of Facultative Paedomorphosis in Salamanders ...

Paedomorphosis and metamorphosis are two major developmental processes that characterize the evolution of complex life cycles in many lineages. Whereas these processes were fixed in some taxa, they remained facultative in others, with alternative phenotypes expressed in the same populations.

High gene flow between alternative morphs and the ...

Because facultative paedomorphosis implies the retention of larval traits in the adults, we expect a change in the magnitude of SSD between morphs. Particularly, we hypothesised that paedomorphs with underdeveloped bodies would exhibit less pronounced SSD patterns than metamorphs.

Sexual size dimorphism in the evolutionary context of ...

In facultatively paedomorphic populations of newts, some individuals retain gills and a fully aquatic life at the adult stage (paedomorphs), while others undergo complete metamorphosis (metamorphs), allowing for a terrestrial life-stage.

Facultative paedomorphosis as a mechanism promoting ...

Facultative paedomorphosis is a polymorphism that has important evolutionary implications in promoting morphological differentiation and variation in habitat use. It occurs in several urodele species throughout the world.

Adaptive significance of facultative paedomorphosis in ...

Neoteny, also called juvenilization, is the delaying or slowing of the physiological development of an organism, typically an animal. Neoteny is found in modern humans. In progenesis, sexual development is accelerated. Both neoteny and progenesis result in paedomorphism, a type of heterochrony. Some authors define paedomorphism as the retention of larval traits, as seen in salamanders. Both neoteny and progenesis cause the retention in adults of traits previously seen only in the young. Such ret nance of facultative paedomorphosis. Each hypothesis makes specific predictions regarding the environmental conditions favoring paedomorphosis, the resulting larval growth patterns, and the fitness consequences to each morph. I evaluate each hypothesis by testing these predictions using published data.
