A Life In Secrets Vera

A Life in Secrets is the best narrative nonfiction I've ever read. Kudos to Sarah Helm for her dazzling research and brilliant portraits of not only Vera but several SOE women and men whom she sent behind enemy lines. She has gone deep inside the WWII years to create a harrowing depiction of events that must not be forgotten.

A LIFE IN SECRETS is a book whose story should be told. It's predominantly about British spies during WWII, and a spy mistress (Vera Atkins) with secrets of her own. Working closely with the female spies sent to France on behalf of the Allies, she went to great lengths to determine the fates of those whom she prepared for espionage.

Sarah Helm, A life in secrets: the story of Vera Atkins and the lost agents of SOE (2005) —just as brilliant and distressing as her later book on Ravensbrück. Apart from the story of the SOE itself, with many mysteries surrounding the life of Vera Atkins (1908–2000) (the wiki article, using Helm's research, makes a rather fine introduction), the book is also a psychological portrait of a most inscrutable woman.
