An online course provided by the University of Warwick via FutureLearn. This exciting course, aimed at those working with parents and infants during pregnancy or the first year of life, focuses on the way in which parents' minds shape their babies mental health development. The course examines the way in which this happens as a result of the parents mind shaping the woman's behaviours in pregnancy and her interactions with the baby in the postnatal period.

Mind To Mind Infant Research Neuroscience And Psychoanalysis

Babies in Mind. Research has shown that many mental health conditions are preventable if the correct care is given early on in life, particularly in the first three years. It has been shown that £10 spent on providing a sure footing for a child's mental health and wellbeing can save up to £70 in the costs of care and support in adolescence and adulthood.

Babies in Mind | Mental Health Foundation

Abstract. "Keeping the Baby in Mind" builds on the expanding evidence pointing to the crucial importance of parents in facilitating their baby's development, and brings together expert contributors to examine a range of innovative psychological and psychotherapeutic interventions that are currently being used to support parents and their infants.
