Federalism And The European Union

The federalisation of the European Union describes processes and proposals by which the European Union could be transformed from an informal confederation into a federation. There is ongoing discussion about the extent to which the EU has already become a federation over the course of decades, and more importantly, to what degree it should continue to evolve into a federalist direction. As of September 2020, the EU has no formal plans to become a federation. Since the 1950s, European integration

The foundation of the UEF goes back to the meeting of 78 representatives of federalist movements from 16 European countries in September 1946 in Hertenstein, near Zürich in Switzerland. These groups held the common belief that only a European Federation based on the idea of unity in diversity could prevent a repetition of the suffering and destruction of the two world wars, so they adopted a declaration-programme which was based on this idea.

Union of European Federalists - Wikipedia

The European Union is a federation that has emerged by bringing together so many former sovereign states. European federalism is an example of federalism through integration and the name "Union" already has a symbolic value. The Union in a literal sense is not a state under international law.
