Lahore: Tales Without End by Majid Sheikh

Hamid Sheikh was in love with Lahore. He was a walking encyclopedia of the city and carried with him tales which either had been documented or were part of the lore. He had paid attention to what he heard from his elders, and so it seems has his son Majid Sheikh. The book Lahore, Tales Without End is a selection from the articles that he wrote in Dawn and it comprises some information which has been documented and much that has not really been documented, except in the tales and stories that ...
