Austrian School - Wikipedia

The foundation of Neoclassical economics is merely the mathematical development of a theoretical approach first proposed by Jeremy Bentham in 1787 in direct opposition to Adam Smith's 1776 Wealth of Nations approach. Bentham claimed that all individuals have the capability to calculate the odds and outcomes and act on the expected value (the probability times the outcome) in a rational way. This can be expressed by the following, where p is the probability of success and A is the outcome:
