Hand Taming Wild Birds At

The instant you see signs of fear when a wild bird first comes to your hand, hold your breath as long as you can and keep absolutely motionless. Never close your hand on a wild bird unless it is to pick up a sick or injured one. The instant you close your hand on a free bird, it is so frightened that when you open your hand again, it will fly as far away from you as fast as it can and will not return. If a bird wants to leave you while you are trying to tame it, let it go; do not follow it.

Place your hand near his cage. Hand taming is a common way of taming birds. However, due to his skittish nature, your bird may be very wary of your hand. Moreover, birds who come from pet stores may associate hands with grabbing and chasing, making them even more wary of human handling. Place your hand where he can easily see it.

Hand Taming Wild Birds – Attracting and Feeding Wild Birds. Now that bird-feeding season is upon us, I'd like to pass along some thoughts on one of the most pleasurable aspects of this hobby, the hand-feeding of wild birds. Strange as this may sound, it is actually quite simple to train a number of species to feed from the hand – assuming, that is, that you have patience and the ability to remain still in cold weather!

Once the first bird works up the nerve to land on your hand and get a bite, others will likely follow. Remain as still as possible when holding your hand out and standing near the bird feeders, don't even swallow. Swallowing may look like a sign that you plan on eating them! Hold your breath if they land on your hand and be very statue-like.
