In other words, we should name our test classes by following these rules: If the test class belongs to the first group, we should name it by using this formula: [The name of the tested class]Test.

For example, if we are writing tests for the RepositoryUserService class, the name of our test class should be: RepositoryUserServiceTest. The benefit of this approach is that if a test fails, this rule helps us figure out which class is broken without reading the test code.
