The odds of the first win were 2,330,636 to one. But the second time, the odds became an unfathomable 5,400,000, 000,000 (that’s trillion!) to one. The reason for this is because you are six times more likely to match five numbers and the bonus ball, than you are of getting the first six numbers correct because statistically there is one more ...

Does Playing the Same Lottery Numbers Actually Work?

Playing The Odds, p.10. tenacity. When applied together, Serena considered them an unbeatable combination—not unlike the formula she used to handle her father. Her assistant, Nero, was a big, quiet black man, who had taken the news of Serena’s interest in the hotel with a silent shrug. She learned that he had worked in Justin’s first casino as a bouncer, and in one capacity or another, he had worked in all of Justin’s properties.
