A Silence Of Three Parts

The third silence. The third silence is described as not an easy thing to notice. It is "of a man who is waiting to die". Elements include parts of the Waystone inn and center around Kote, specifically in his hands. The third part ends with "The Waystone (inn) was his, just as the third silence was his. This was appropriate as it was the greatest silence of the three, wrapping/holding the others inside itself.

A SILENCE OF THREE PARTS " The Waystone Inn lay in silence, and it was a silence of three parts. The most obvious part was a hollow, echoing quiet, made by things that were lacking. If there had been a wind it would have sighed through the trees, set the inn's sign creaking on its hooks, and brushed the silence down the road like trailing autumn leaves.

A Silence of Three Parts and A Man of Three Parts: An Examination of the Use of Metaphor in the Prologue to The Name of the Wind. Metaphors shape our understanding of reality. A well-constructed metaphor can reinforce previous notions of an idea or change the way the idea or subject is understood and thus how reality is understood or experienced, such as "silence is hollow," because of this construction then silence can be filled, or silence can echoing.
