Earth Sheltered Home Designs Explanation

Earth-sheltered homes are exactly that, houses covered with earth. There are two main ways of doing this. Either the house can be set into a hill with earth covering 3 exterior walls and the roof, or earth can be piled against the external walls. The latter type, known as earth-bermed, sits above ground, sometimes with earth covering the roof.

It is generally considered best to have soil that is high in gravel and sand content, as these are excellent for use with underground houses and berm earth-sheltered homes. They are excellent for compression and can be compacted more easily, and permit heavy load, while ensuring proper drainage and moisture flow.

Underground Homes - Build an Amazing Earth-Sheltered Home

Earth sheltered homes are often constructed with energy conservation and savings in mind. Specific designs of earth shelters allow for maximum savings. For bermed or in-hill construction, a common plan is to place all the living spaces on the side of the house facing the equator (or north or east, depending on latitude; see "Topography").
