Decision Making In Health And Decision making is central to health policy and medical practice. Because health outcomes are probabilistic, most decisions are made under conditions of uncertainty. This review considers two classes of decisions in health care: decisions made by providers on behalf of patients, and shared decisions between patients and providers.

Decision making in medicine and health care

Decision making in health care involves consideration of a complex set of diagnostic, therapeutic and prognostic uncertainties. Medical therapies have side effects, surgical interventions may lead to complications, and diagnostic tests can produce misleading results.
 Furthermore, patient values and service costs must be considered.

"Shared decision making is a key component of patient-centered health care," according to the ONC. "It is a process in which clinicians and patients work together to make decisions and select tests, treatments and care plans based on clinical evidence that balances risks and expected outcomes with patient preferences and values.”

3 Best Practices for Shared Decision-Making in Healthcare

Informed decision-making is the two-way communication process between a patient and one or more health practitioners that is central to patient-centred health care. It reflects the ethical principle that a patient has the right to decide what is appropriate for them, taking into account their personal circumstances, beliefs and priorities.
