On the other hand, the prison is considered an inevitable and permanent feature of our social lives. Most people are quite surprised to hear that the prison abolition movement also has a long history - one that dates back to the historical appearance of the prison as the main form of punishment. In fact, the most natural reaction is to assume that prison activists - even those who consciously refer to themselves as "anti-prison activists" - are simply trying to ameliorate prison conditions or perhaps to reform the prison in more fundamental ways.

Are Prisons Obsolete? - The Anarchist Library

According to her, this makes the prisons irrelevant and obsolete. America is spending a lot of money and resources committing people into isolation without getting any benefits and positive results. Proliferation of more prison cells only lead to bigger prison population.
