Vibration and structural acoustics analysis has become an essential requirement for high-quality structural and mechanical design in order to assure acoustic comfort and the integrity, reliability and fail-safe behavior of structures and machines.

Analyzing Vibration With Acoustic Structural Coupling

The present paper discusses impedance and mobility approach integrated with finite element method (FEM) for free vibration analysis of structural-acoustic coupled systems for irregular geometry. In this method, coupled natural frequencies of any irregular geometry with flexible surfaces with different boundary conditions can be estimated. The proposed hybrid method helps to understand the ...

An analytical method is developed for predicting vehicle interior noise and identifying noise sources. In this method, the finite element models representing the vehicle structure and its enclosed acoustic cavity are coupled mathematically. A modal formulation is employed to solve for the interior acoustic response, and an analysis is developed to identify the structural and acoustic modal participation as well as the boundary panel participation in producing the response.

Acoustic Analysis. A full description of acoustic analysis is varied and complex since applications cover a range of frequencies and integrates: generation of acoustic waves through vibration; propagation through multiple media, through atmospheric layers, along surfaces and interfaces, in rooms and auditoriums; diffraction, reflection, absorption and attenuation during transmission, and structural response due to an incident acoustic wave.

Acoustic Analysis - AltaSim Technologies, LLC

Statistical energy analysis (SEA) is a method for predicting the transmission of sound and vibration through complex structural acoustic systems. The method is particularly well suited for quick system level response predictions at the early design stage of a product, and for predicting responses at higher frequencies.
