Thermoplastic elastomers (TPEs) are a range of copolymers or a physical mix of polymers (usually a plastic and a rubber). Those based on mixed polymer systems consist of polymers with both plastic and elastic properties. Traditional elastomers are thermosetting materials with covalent crosslinks between the polymer chains (formed during the 'vulcanization process'), but require processing using different methods to higher-volume thermoplastics, e.g. higher temperatures, longer processing ...

Abstract. 3D printing utilized as a direct deposition of conductive polymeric materials onto textiles reveals to be an attractive technique in the development of functional textiles. However, the conductive fillers—filled thermoplastic polymers commonly used in the development of functional textiles through 3D printing technology and most specifically through Fused Deposition Modeling (FDM) process—are not appropriate for textile applications as they are excessively brittle and fragile ...
