Binary numbers are base 2 numbers, and have only two values – 0 and 1. If we look at a binary number like 101, then we can again assign column values as we did with our decimal number, but this time we use 2, and not 10 as the base. So binary 101 binary has 1 in the units column,0 in the 2s column and 1 in the 4s column.

When you write PHP code, a good practice is to add PHPDoc annotations to make your code more understandable and to help your IDE provide you with relevant code suggestions. By default, VS Code doesn't suggest anything while writing annotations. To activate code suggestions in comments, open the settings.json file and add the following line:
