Translucent concrete is made by mixing optical fibres into the traditional concrete. The optical fibre strands constitute only

4 to 5 percent of the volume of the mixture, and the low percentage allows this green construction material to retain all the strength of traditional concrete.

INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL OF SCIENTIFIC & TECHNOLOGY RESEARCH ...

The light transmitting material is largely believed to have been invented by Hungarian architect Aron Losoncz, who began developing pre-fabricated translucent concrete blocks he called LiTraCon (light transmitting concrete) in 2004, just three years after graduating from Budapest's Technical University. Here, the manufacturer hand-molds large pieces of concrete, embedding thousands of strands of optic fiber in the material at the same time.

How Translucent Concrete Works | HowStuffWorks

Translucent concrete is a light transmitting concrete based building material. It works on the property of Nano-Optics. Its light transmitting is mainly due to uniform distribution of high numerical aperture Plastic Optic Fibres (POF) and hence it is also known as LiTraCon. It is produced by adding about 4% to 5% of optical fibres by volume in concrete mix.

Translucent Concrete - Civil Engineering Portal

Translucent concrete is used in fine architecture as a façade material and for cladding of interior walls. Light-transmitting concrete has also been applied to various design products. Several ways of producing translucent concrete exist. All are based on a fine grain concrete and only 5% light conducting elements that are added during casting process. After setting, the concrete is cut to plates or stones with standard machinery for cutting stone materials. Due to bends in the fibers and ...

Hungarian architect Aron Losonczai has produced translucent blocks made by mixing/placing glass fibres (presumably fibre optic material) into the combination of crushed stone, cement and water, i.e. concrete. These fibres run parallel to each other between the main block faces.
