Rate Of Memory Decline Less In Mothers Who Do Paid Work. The study also found that the rate of memory decline in the mothers who worked, as well as the non-mothers who worked, were less than the mothers or women who weren’t the part of the workforce. In fact, the results were even more surprising in the single mothers who didn’t work. They had 83% more chance of falling prey to memory loss than the mothers who participated in the work force.
