GNU Make is a tool which controls the generation of executables and other non-source files of a program from the program's source files. Make gets its knowledge of how to build your program from a file called the makefile, which lists each of the non-source files and how to compute it from other files. When you write a program, you should write a makefile for it, so that it is possible to use Make to build and install the program.

Using a make file: With a make file for our executable, it is easy to compile that executable. Try using the make file we've given you. First, remove the old executable and object files (if there are any): % rm main *.o. Run make with the command: % make. Remember that this will cause make to generate the first target in the make file, which is main.
