3) One child has made several bad marriages. If you're not enamored with your child's spouse, or just worry that the next one will be worse than the last, you may want to leave that child's inheritance in trust also. In this case, the trust isn't to protect her from financial bad judgment, but rather, romantic bad luck. Such a trust can act like a financial prenuptial agreement, segregating inherited money from the marital checkbook (and subsequent divorce proceedings).
