Most people's first inclination upon receiving the cup is to swirl their straw in circles, mixing the two layers of espresso and milk to create a uniform creamy brown-colored coffee drink. If you didn't already know, most of the drink options displayed on a cafe menu are made with the same or similar ingredients, meaning construction is key. A caramel macchiato is made with vanilla syrup to start, then milk, then espresso, and is finished with a special crosshatched pattern of caramel ...
