A strong and healthy beach dune is a powerful antidote against coastal erosion. In the second half of the 20th century, coastal planners have also introduced sand fences in an attempt to hold sand on top of the dune. Sometimes it works really well; in other cases, it is simply ineffective as a dune restoration mechanism.

The importance of sand dunes to the coastline

As a result, dune restoration usually begins with the establishment of pioneer plants. Dunes that are only slightly damaged may be repaired by planting vegetation in bare areas, giving stressed grasses a judicious amount of fertilizer, and protecting the area from trampling and traffic. Vegetation is critical to dune formation and stabilization.

Barrier islands are coastal landforms and a type of dune system that are exceptionally flat or lumpy areas of sand that form by wave and tidal action parallel to the mainland coast. They usually occur in chains, consisting of anything from a few islands to more than a dozen. They are subject to change during storms and other action, but absorb energy and protect the coastlines and create areas of protected waters where wetlands may flourish. A barrier chain may extend uninterrupted for over a hu
