Bombing To Win Air Power

In “Bombing to Win: Air Power and Coercion in War,” Pape shows that strategic airpower has never been the panacea many theorists and war planners had hoped and believed it would be. And, he argues, the advent of advanced precision-guided technology does little to change that fact.

The American bombing of Vietnam is a classic example of conventional coercion. Unable or unwilling to commit the ground forces necessary to win decisively in the South, the United States attempted to compel Hanoi to alter its behavior by using powerful air forces to bypass the battlefield and strike directly at North Vietnam.

While now a bit dated (published in 1996), Bombing to Win is a thorough study of the limits of strategic air power that provides key insights backed up by hard data. Most civilians, politicians and the press assume that America can compel other countries by aerial bombardment alone.

Bombing to Win. Pape published his first full-length book in 1996, Bombing to Win: Air Power and Coercion in War, where he questions the conventional wisdom that coercive air power is both effective and relatively cheap. Rather than coercing citizens of the bombed nation to rise up against their government, coercive air power often backfires, resulting in a citizenry that is both surprisingly resilient and loyal to their government.

- Strat. bombing only matters in long wars of attrition decided by material superiority - Theater air power combined with ground power is stronger coercive tool (PGMs better used for this) - Should focus on destroying enemy armies from air- obviously contradicts Warden. - Threats to civilians wasteful & immoral

Robert Pape, Bombing to Win | SAASS Comps Prep Wiki | Fandom

This solidly constructed work concludes with some overly simple assertions: ‘Strategic bombing does not matter,’ ‘Punishment does not work,’ and the like. Exploring a large number of cases superficially and five cases in depth, the author builds a strenuous argument that strategic air power has never delivered on its promises and, for reasons intrinsic to strategy, cannot.

Strategic bombing is a military strategy used in total war with the goal of defeating the enemy by destroying its morale, its economic ability to produce and transport materiel to the theatres of military operations, or both. It is a systematically organized and executed attack from the air which can utilize strategic bombers, long- or medium-range missiles, or nuclear-armed fighter-bomber aircraft to attack targets deemed vital to the enemy's war-making capability. One of the strategies of war
