Summary. In February 1950, when the Truman administration extended formal recognition to the State of Vietnam and material aid to the French effort to reestablish a crumbling empire, American officials never imagined the quarter-century-long Vietnam War would be the ultimate result. The French had, for several years, been attempting to beat back Vietnamese nationalists led by Ho Chi Minh and his Viet Minh fighters and to reimpose colonial rule in Vietnam.

The Cold War, Colonialism, and the Origins of the American ...

To reflect the attitude of the country's leaders, Vietnam's state-controlled media stepped up its propaganda war against the Khmer Rouge, with the official Nhân Dân newspaper regularly calling for international intervention to save the Kampuchean people from domestic terror initiated by the Khmer Rouge government.
