As you've learned in previous tutorials, the central dogma of molecular genetics is DNA makes RNA makes protein. When cells make protein, they transfer information from a sequence of nucleotides into a sequence of amino acids. If you think about nucleic acids (written in nucleotides) and protein (written in amino acids) as different languages, then protein synthesis is a shift in molecular language and, as a result, protein synthesis is called translation.

Translation/Protein Synthesis (Interactive tutorial ...

The next step is to join amino acids together to form a protein. The order in which amino acids are joined together determine the shape, properties, and function of a protein. The four bases of RNA form a language with just four nucleotide bases: adenine (A), cytosine (C), guanine (G), and uracil (U).
