Biodegradable and oxo-biodegradable plastics. Biodegradable or oxodegradable plastics are sometimes touted as a solution for packaging that is not currently economically recyclable and to address issues such as the presence of littered plastics in the natural environment. The industry is concerned about these statements and feel that standards are required to ensure there are no false claims about how these material break down and under what conditions.

Biodegradable and oxo-biodegradable plastics

Currently, only about 1 % of plastics and plastic products on the global market are considered bio-based, compostable and/or biodegradable (European Bioplastics e.V., 2020b). Most plastics continue to be made from fossil fuels in a process that contributes to increased greenhouse gas emissions along their value chain.

Biodegradable and compostable plastics — challenges and ...

Oxo-degradable plastics are a type of degradable plastic designed to fragment in the presence of oxygen. Oxo-degradable plastics will not break down at all, or will break down extremely slowly in environments with relatively low concentrations of oxygen such as in marine environments, if covered by soil or buried in a compost bin.
