This article describes the Equine Assisted Growth and Learning Association's (EAGALA) experiential model called Equine Assisted Psychotherapy (EAP). EAGALA's model is based on the Association for Experiential Education's (AEE) tenets and is focused on the learner's experience with horses. Drawing on the historical use of equines in the healing arts, we argue that EAP is distinct from other modalities that incorporate horses because it does not promote horseback riding or horsemanship ...
