Material requirements planning (MRP) is a production planning, scheduling, and inventory control system used to manage manufacturing processes. Most MRP systems are software -based, but it is possible to conduct MRP by hand as well. An MRP system is intended to simultaneously meet three objectives:

Material requirements planning - Wikipedia

Stemming from the material requirements planning software introduced in the 1970s, manufacturing resource planning (MRP II) systems emerged in the 1980s and evolved beyond the relatively static metrics that drove early inventory and procurement planning by integrating more complex and dynamic data points, such as staffing levels, machine capacity and financial data to help managers more accurately plan inventory and production scheduling.

Manufacturing Resource Planning | MRP II | MasterControl

Manufacturing planning is a coordinated process involving demand management, forecasting, master scheduling, material planning (MRP), and capacity planning, fully integrated with operational management applications including production control, inventory management, and procurement.

Manufacturing planning for resource and capacity ...

Material Requirement Planning (MRP) in Manufacturing In order to calculate what material is required and when an order can go into production, an MRP system takes into account information on current and future orders, forecast demand, the master production schedule, the Bill of Materials (BOM) and inventory.

Importance of Material Requirements Planning (MRP) in ...

MRP II stands for manufacturing resource planning, which evolved from its predecessor, materials replacement planning. MRP II creates detailed production schedules and coordinates component materials with machine and labor availability. MRP II, essentially, addresses the shortcomings of the original MRP, and actually expands on what MRP does.
