LA MAISON DE RENDEZ-VOUS

La Maison de rendez-vous was published a year after In C premiere, and while this is a random fact I needed to start the review, the book has a strikingly similar usage of repetitions and slow changes common in minimalist music. Similarity to music probably looks lazy and standard, but Mr. Robbe-Grillet obviously doesn't go for Toscanini-like brightness of moments and is much more devoted to Adorno-praised interest in the structure of a piece.

Xertigny. La maison de service au public sur rendez-vous

La Maison de Rendez-Vous is a lava lamp of a narrative, a mutating blob that repeats and repeats and repeats, the details always slightly different, with parts breaking off and then folding back in. Repetition is typical in the world of Robbe-Grillet, but it's more intense here, and the story more impossible.
