Drainage water management may increase base flow in streams and ditches because of a higher gradient from the fields. A higher field water table may increase lateral and vertical seepage losses. Since this water will likely pass through reduced (low) oxygen zones, seepage water may be denitrified before reaching surface water conduits.

DRAINAGE WATER MANAGEMENT - USDA

Irrigation systems in arid regions should be designed to supply water and also to remove water—implying that irrigation should be combined with drainage. This may seem paradoxical, but salts need to be removed by application of additional water to dissolve the salts, leach them out of the soil, and subsequently remove the leachate through drains or ditches, where the drain water may still create concerns for downstream areas due to its high salt content.

Irrigation - SARE

Drainage water management is the process of managing the timing and the amount of water discharged from agricultural drainage systems. DWM is based on the premise that the same drainage intensity is not required at all times during the year. With DWM, both water quality improvement and production benefits are possible.
