Essential Tissue Healing Of The Face And Neck

Tissue healing refers to the body's replacement of destroyed tissue by living tissue and comprises two essential components - Regeneration and Repair. Regeneration - occurs when injured specialised tissue is replaced by the proliferation of surrounding undamaged specialised cells and restore the integrity of the damaged tissue to normal function. Repair - Is defined when injured tissue is replaced by granulation tissue which matures to form

TISSUE HEALING

After an injury, soft tissue structures in the body undergo a natural healing process through specific phases of healing. The timeline for healing depends on: the individual; extent of the injury; age; overall health status. Physiotherapy helps facilitate a healthier healing - resulting in a smaller risk of re-injury, chronic pain and dysfunction.

This entry was posted on 21st January 2017 by Michael Core. Following any injury the body needs time to recuperate properly and one of the most important aspects of healing is rest.

Although you might be tempted to work through the pain and carry on, this can make the healing process much longer.

Accepting that rest is important will help you to plan your recovery better and the good news is that you do not have to give up all physical activities.
