Declarative Process Modeling in BPMN 85 In the past decade, several researchers have exposed the limitations of this imperative paradigm in the context of business processes with high variability, such as customer lead management processes, product design processes, patient treatment and related healthcare processes [17,19].

Declarative Process Modeling in BPMN

As an alternative, declarative process modeling notations have been proposed (e.g., Declare). These notations allow modelers to capture constraints on the allowed activity flows, meaning that all flows are allowed provided that they do not violate the specified constraints.

Declarative process
modeling, by contrast,
is referred to as an
'outside-to- inside'
approach. In contrast to imperative
languages, declarative
languages do not specify the procedure a priori. Instead of determining how the process has to work
exactly, only its essential characteristics are described.

Imperative versus Declarative Process Modeling Languages ...

Someone at BPM 2012
described imperative
modeling as:
"everything is illegal
except the actions
explicitly allowed by the process" while declarative modeling is
"everything is allowed
except those actions
that are explicitly prohibited by the model." BPMN is an imperative model that specifies what is allowed; any deviation
from the prescribed
course is illegal.

Imperative vs. Declarative Processes Models | Thinking Matters

The paper presents a conservative extension of BPMN for declarative
process modeling,
namely BPMN-D, and
shows that Declare
models can be transformed into
readable BPMN-D

models. Traditional business process modeling notations, including the standard Business Process Model and Notation (BPMN), rely on an imperative paradigm wherein the process model captures all allowed activity flows.

The generated task sequences can then serve as an input to a selected process mining method or be processed by an algorithm constructing a BPMN model directly based on the log and additional information included in the declarative process specification.

Towards Automated Process Modeling Based on BPMN

Declare is a graphical representation language proposed for declarative modeling of business processes based on LTL-logic [1, 5, 6]. A Declare model contains a set of activities and a set of constraints that can span multiple activities. It specifies the process environment in terms of what is necessary and what is not allowed (i.e., rules

The XML Process Definition Language (XPDL) is a format standardized by the Workflow Management Coalition (WfMC) to interchange business process definitions between different workflow products, i.e. between different modeling tools and management suites. XPDL - Wikipedia

Declarative Notation does not attempt to model the flow of a problem; they establish desired results i.e. specifying what they want to happen but not how it should happen. SQL is an example of declarative programming because it does not attempt to control the flow of a program; it simply states what it would like to appear but not how it is done.
