The neck muscles, including the sternocleidomastoid and the trapezius, are responsible for the gross motor movement in the muscular system of the head and neck. They move the head in every direction, pulling the skull and jaw towards the shoulders, spine, and scapula. Working in pairs on the left and right sides of the body, these muscles control the flexion and extension of the head and neck. Working individually, these muscles rotate the head or flex the neck laterally to the left or right.

Form Of The Head And Neck The muscles of the face, as you’ve probably discovered, have almost nothing to do with the final form of the face Most of the time, facial muscles do not create the form itself but influence the form change. In other words, they are just moving the masses instead of being the masses.
