Before you learn any opening, middlegame, or endgame you need to learn the most important concept - The Process of Thinking. In fact, in my full program I dedicate the entire first month to this concept. This lesson is a great introduction to what you need to be thinking about.

By the first move, 1.d4, White would like to limit Black's options in the center, play more safely and control the position without many tactics. For that reason, it's important for a club player to choose an aggressive opening for Black in order to activate his forces quickly and create problems on White's center.
