Reflection and refraction. Light rays change direction when they reflect off a surface, move from one transparent medium into another, or travel through a medium whose composition is Reflection and Refraction . Our study of geometrical optics will center on the application of two basic laws: one for reflection and one for refraction. Reflection is just as you might imagine: rays of light that are deflected by a surface (perhaps being sent back toward their source) are reflected. If you've ever looked in a mirror, you've looked at light that has been reflected by a surface (the mirror).

The Laws of Reflection and Refraction | UniversalClass

Geometric optics is one of the oldest branches of physics, dealing with the laws of refraction and reflection. The law of reflection was known to the ancient Greeks who made measurements that supported this law. The law of refraction, however, was not formulated mathematically until almost 1500 years later. Image formation by lenses and mirrors is explained by these two laws.

Lab 10 - Reflection and Refraction

Through Reflection and Refraction, Mirrors and Lenses form an image of an object. The position and nature of the image depends on the focal length of the mirror/lens and the position of the object. Position of the object or image is described by the distance between the object/image and the mirror/lens. Thin-Lens/Mirror Equation states that $\frac{1}{f} = \frac{1}{d_o} + \frac{1}{d_i}$
