Living in God's Two Kingdoms - Feeding on Christ

VanDrunen's answer lies in the thesis that Christians live in two kingdoms, a common kingdom and a redemptive kingdom. Or, in plain English, the world and the church. All people are part of the common kingdom by virtue of the covenant that God made with Noah and all mankind after the flood in Genesis 9.

Book Review: Living in God's Two Kingdoms by David VanDrunen

God's people are called to live in two kingdoms simultaneously.

Under the first, we are called to partake in various cultural activities and pursuits with our non-Christian neighbors. Under the second, we are called to live within the covenant of salvation, recognizing that we are a chosen people and should live distinctly different.

Living in God's Two Kingdoms - A Vision of Christianity ...

In these two chapters VanDrunen argues that now, as in the patriarchal age and during the exile, God's people live as sojourners and exiles on earth, and that we live in two realms, or kingdoms: the "common kingdom" established through the Noahic covenant, which consists in the God-ordained society and institutions which are common to all humanity, and the "redemptive kingdom" established through the Abrahamic covenant, which consists of God's saving rule over his distinct people.
