Field experiments on voter mobilization enable researchers to test theoretical propositions while at the same time addressing practical questions that confront campaigns. This confluence of interests has led to increasing collaboration between researchers and campaign organizations, which in turn has produced a rapid accumulation of experiments on voting.

Voter Mobilization, Experimentation, and Translational ...

Introduction. Voter mobilization field experiments, often referred to as “get out the vote,” or GOTV field experiments, are targeted efforts—mostly by scholars but occasionally in coordination with campaigns—to apply experimental methods to the study of voter turnout. These studies are conducted in the “real world,” meaning voters are randomly assigned to receive a treatment, or no treatment.
