It is fair to assume that the closer a player is to the goal, the easier it is to score. However, that's not what the numbers indicate. The goalie has less of an area to cover and can attack any player with the puck. While the shooter may think they have plenty of open spaces from being so close to the net, the Shooters Illusion says otherwise. Another reason this isn't necessarily the highest scoring area is because a goalie will have a clearer puck vision and therefore will be unlikely ...
